Stepping back to nature, first up the whole place was cleaned up to take up all the waste, degradable and non degradable separately. Later plants and trees were planted onto the ground which will be effective in the future while also locally available greenery was taken care of and treated well. Being a technical unit, the members further also went onto construct seats which were less in number and also repair the already existing ones from bamboo efficiently giving a chance to people to enjoy nature to its fullest right near to it. The place was also added with some artwork by the members building an aesthetic awe to the location. The place from converting to a dump pit was rescued by the efforts of the members to a very approachable peaceful place to just sit up and relax and heed to the voices of nature brimming through.
